DECLASSIFIED

Tuesday, February 26,1952.

I have mixed up Sunday and Monday and Tuesday in these notes. I suppose I lost a day because these interminable conferences and difficulties went on regardless of time. I saw almost nothing of Lisbon, and never entered an antique shop. At any rate we did leave on Tuesday in a tremendous hurry, and arrived that evening in Paris, where I put my unparalleled cold to bed at 2 a.m. on Wednesday morning, after punctuating each page of Under Two Flags , which I bought in London for Diana Cooper, with at least a brace of sneezes.
